DIETS FOR SENIOR PETS

Your vet has suggested that your pet may benefit from a diet, for senior pets – here is how diet can help.

As pets age there are a number of ways in which diets should adapt. Older pets need support for ageing joints, they need help managing their weight and they need support for the heart and kidneys.

These diets contain high levels of omega-3 from fish to help keep joints supple and coat in good condition.

These diets have controlled protein levels, to reduce workload on the kidneys, but have high quality, highly digestible fish protein to ensure an adequate supply of nutrients even with controlled protein levels.

Added taurine and omega-3 from fish can also help support the heart function.

Energy levels have also been adjusted for senior pets – with slightly lower energy levels in dog food, to avoid the weight gain common in older dogs, and slightly higher energy levels in cat food, to help prevent weight the loss common in older cats.
